

Nazis Publish Rules For Warsaw Ghetto; Wall Is 8 Feet High

By Jewish Telegraphic Agency
GENEVA.—Acting to complete the isolation of the 300,000 Warsaw Jews living in the first walled ghetto in modern history, the Nazi authorities have issued regulations restricting travel and use of public services. The wall is 8 feet high.

The regulations forbid the Jews in the ghetto to use gas and electricity after 8 p. m. They are prohibited from leaving the district without special passes. No Gentile may enter the ghetto without a similar pass. Tramway service between the ghetto and other parts of Warsaw has been discontinued.

Jewish physicians may reside outside the ghetto, but must display six-pointed Jewish stars on their nameplates, as must Jewish doctors throughout Nazi-occupied Poland, according to a new decree.

Establishment of a walled ghetto for the Jews of Warsaw has been followed by a Nazi order for institution of a ghetto in Radom, it was reported. According to the Krakauer Zeitung, German organ in Poland, Jews in Radom have been ordered to leave the center of the city for a ghetto comprising a small quarter able to hold only part of their number. The remainder will be obliged to leave soon for the provinces.

Meanwhile, two Cracow Jews have been sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment for violating the ban on kosher slaughter.

Opening in Rzeszow of the first Jewish school under the enforced ghetto educational system is reported in the Nazi-dominated Jewish organ, Gazeta Zydowska which states 800 pupils have been enrolled. The Jewish community of Cracow also decided to open schools for Jewish children. A registration conducted by the community established that there are 4,023 Jewish children of school age.

Lack of clothing and spread of disease among hundreds of thousands of Jews conscripted into labor camps in Nazi-occupied Poland have prompted the executive of the Warsaw Jewish Community to apply to the Nazi administration of the Government-General for a special loan to be used in improving health conditions in the camps, it was reported here. The community at the same time organized its own campaign to obtain clothing from the local Jewish population to be shipped to the camps. The first two days of the campaign resulted in collection of 5,000 pieces of warm underwear, 3,000 pairs of socks, 300 suits, 200 sweaters and 200 pairs of shoes, in addition to 1,000 plates, knives and forks and other kitchen utensils.

Ghetto 'Suburb for Jews'

By Jewish Telegraphic Agency
LISBON.—A German short-wave broadcast in Spanish gave a somewhat novel description of the walled Warsaw ghetto by stating that "a complete suburb had been placed at the disposal of Warsaw Jews." The broadcast said that Jews have the right to "move freely" through that part of the city reserved for them. It added that Germans and Poles had been forbidden to set foot in the ghetto area.

The known fatality list rose to thirty when seven corpses were extracted from the partly submerged hulk and one of the injured passengers died in the hospital.

Of the remainder of the 1,771 Jewish refugees who had been scheduled for deportation to a British colony for duration of the war, nine were detained in hospitals, thirteen escaped from hospitals and the rest were being held in the Athlit detention camp.

The explosion occurred suddenly while most of the passengers were on deck. Those on the upper deck heard an explosion and a "boiling noise" which continued while the ship heeled over. They jumped or were thrown overboard. British police and Austrian soldiers on duty in the harbor leaped into the bay, picking up the unfortunates and pulling them into passing boats. Every available harbor boat, launch and tug raced to the refugees' rescue, in addition to many who swam to their aid. This made possible the rescue of more than a thousand within a few minutes.

The rescue was conducted under the personal command of the naval officer in charge, Captain Guy Lydekker. The rescuers, according to eyewitnesses, showed superhuman bravery and devotion, for which the Jewish community has expressed deep appreciation. The survivors were taken to a transit shed where they were supplied with blankets, clothing and food. The injured were taken on stretchers by the Red Cross and the Red Shield to government and Hadassah hospitals.

The winner of the Essex Hosiery Shop gift certificate was Paul Sicanoff, who hit high (with handicap) for a lofty 662 total. The "kid wonder" surely has winning ways in more games than bowling!!

Maxie Kosof, the big newspaperman in bowling circles, continued his hitting streak and actually shot 609, with one game of 237. Max has become one of the city's outstanding kegler and should cash in on much "Pin Money" before the close of the season.

Sam and Allen Goldstein were over to Parkway for some practice. Hope they can become regular in joining the B'nai B'rith crowd.

Lou Sagalowsky, the ex-athlete of Y. M. C. A. fame, still can show the younger lads how "it should be done." His speedy left hooks drop a lot of wood and his consistent totals prove to be assets to the "Capitals." Nice going, Saggy!!

Jack Kammins, who reported late for the Sunday morning session two weeks ago, gave another fake alibi for his delinquency. He said, first he had to cook breakfast for his mother-in-law, who was visiting his home over the holidays; then his car froze up and wouldn't start, thus necessitating the use of the "thumb" system to the alleys from 40th and Central!! "Boy, no wonder he's a lawyer!!"

Emmy Koby, daughter of Saul, is a loyal rooter for the "Sealskins" and is on hand every Sunday to root for her dad. For his high total last Sunday, Saul won two tickets, contributed by Bill Meyers, Sr., to the Tuesday eve lecture by "Wild Bill" Donovan, who spoke on our National Defense in Caleb Mills Hall.

We are waiting for replies concerning the idea for our own State tournament, announced in last week's issue. How about some action on this sporty subject??

Egypt to Supply Food To Palestine; No Shortage Seen

By Jewish Telegraphic Agency

WASHINGTON—Despite dislocation of communications on the Mediterranean, with all available shipping utilized for the transportation of war material, Palestine is not suffering any serious shortage of staple food products, the Zionist Organization of America reported. The report said that Egypt alone was ready to fill Palestine's food demands.

"Egypt is plentifully stocked up with food provisions which it is exporting to Palestine in large quantities," it was stated. "These products include fresh and salted fish, cream, onions, rice, potatoes, nuts, sugar, beets and cereals."

"Palestine has a record wheat production. According to Mr. Mason, chief agriculture officer, this year's wheat harvest amounts to some 150,000 tons, marking a considerable increase over the production in any preceding year. Inasmuch as wheat consumption in Palestine averages 140,000 tons per year, Palestine's entire domestic need for the year will be covered by home production."

"Jewish merchants in Palestine have concluded agreements with Syrian merchants for the barter of 500 tons of potatoes from Syria for the equivalent in Palestine wine. Similar agreements are about to be concluded for the exchange of other products."

The Z. O. A. also reported that Dr. Chaim Weizmann had been appointed scientific adviser to the British Government and that a government laboratory has been placed at his disposal. Dr. A. Bergman of the Staff Institute of Rehovoth has been named to assist Dr. Weizmann.

AL SEGAL Speaks on GOING SHOPPING

I am informed concerning the distress of Mrs. Zilch which isn't in fact her name. Her name may be Zylch instead of Zilch.

The Zilches live, as I am told in a certain delectable village not far from a certain big American city which may be Chicago and then, again may not be Chicago.

It is only recently that they moved into the village and are occupying a very nice house indeed. Not only are they happy in the house but also in the neighborhood.

They are especially happy in the neighborhood because it is so far from the rather Jewish neighborhood in which they used to live and in which they were born, in fact. To get away from the Jewish neighborhood was like some lucky escape for Mr. and Mrs. Zilch who had more and more been feeling the burden of being Jewish.

Mr. and Mrs. Zilch had begun hating themselves for being born Jewish and I hear it said that Hitler couldn't have hated them more than they hated themselves.

On the evening of the day they moved, when all the furniture had been set in place, and they were seated for the first time at their bright new fireplace, Mrs. Zilch said to Zilch: "At last, Mortimer!" She said it with a kind of sweet sigh.

By this she meant yes, Mortimer, at last we are out of it all, out of Hazelwood, out of all that. (Hazelwood is the name of the somewhat Jewish community from which they had escaped.) Her happy sigh might have been that of a refugee from Germany looking at the Statue of Liberty for the first time.

Yet as time went on, Mrs. Zilch felt they hadn't completely escaped. They hadn't, in fact, escaped from themselves. They were still conscious of being Jewish. They were the more conscious of it because they were about the only Jews in the neighborhood. When they were living in Hazelwood they could not feel so conspicuously Jewish because there were so many Jews around them.

"Mortimer," said Mrs. Zilch, "I am not feeling as comfortable as I should."

Not that their neighbors weren't very nice. They were, indeed, civilized people who could find no fault with their new neighbors simply because they were Jewish. They know Mr. Zilch by reputation as a very substantial business man in town and Mrs. Zilch as a lady whom the press reported as being active in this and that.

Their neighbors had made the customary ceremonial calls on them and had admired the appointments of their house.

"Still," Mrs. Zilch said, "I can not feel I am one of them. I feel like some one apart from them."

She meant by this that she was still feeling quite Jewish. To feel Jewish hadn't been quite so much a pain in Hazelwood as it was in the new place.

She thought this way and that about the whole thing and came finally to a conclusion.

"Mortimer, I think I know what's the matter."

"The matter with what?"

"With us, Mortimer. I think we should have a part in the religious life of this community. That will solve it."

"You mean belong to a church?"

"Yes! That will make us a part of the community."

Mr. Zilch never had had much to do with religion. When he was 13 he was confirmed in a temple and that was about his last association with anything religious, except for the few minutes he stood before a rabbi to be married and the half hour of the funeral service for his father over whom they said yisgadal.

But he is a man who never interfered much in the social things his wife arranged for him. When she says, Mortimer, we're going to this house for dinner, he goes. So when she suggested taking up Christianity he shrugged his shoulders and kept on reading his newspaper.

Yet to take up a new religion is not a simple matter like calling up the grocery and ordering a steak for dinner. With Mrs. Zilch it is more like buying a new hat. When

Mrs. Zilch goes to buy a new hat it is a matter of trying on many hats before she comes to the one that she is certain fits her most decoratively. And it is not only a business of trying on many hats but of visiting many hat stores.

So it is with Mrs. Zilch acquiring a suitable religion. She has already rejected the Methodist and the Baptist. She saw that the Methodist and the Baptists had wooden church houses in the village and came to the conclusion that they couldn't be the best people.

She feels that if she goes into a church she should go into one that would be most becoming to her, just as she chose the more expensive fur coat.

Now she hangs in indecision between the Episcopalians and the Presbyterians. Both have handsome granite Gothic edifices in the village and she has ascertained that both have good people in their memberships. If the Episcopal church has among its members the Blacks who are the big doorknob people, the Presbyterians have the Whites who are the big gas and electric people. Mrs. Zilch hangs horribly troubled between the two, not knowing which way to turn.

All this is brought to me in a letter by a friend of Mrs. Zilch who, in her behalf, consults my wisdom in the matter. Well, if Mrs. Zilch wishes to take up a new and handsome religion I think I know one: It is as quaint as any of the charming antiques Mrs. Zilch treasures in her house. It is bright with candle lights and I have heard of Mrs. Zilch's fondness for the charm of candle lights. It is beautiful with sweet and meaningful legend—a feature that should appeal to Mrs. Zilch who is so active in the Folk Lore Society. It contains lovely ceremonies, a fact that should appeal to Mrs. Zilch whose Christmas trees are always so beautiful. It is Judaism. It is new to the Zilches who have really never tried it.

(This is not to say that Episcopalianism and Presbyterianism are not good religions. They are all right, too.)

Between You and Me

By BEN LEWIS

POLITICS

The shortest-lived order ever issued by any department of the United States government is the edict issued last week by Governor Cramer of the Virgin Islands waiving the passport and visa requirements for admission of refugees from Europe into the islands. It was in effect for four days only. The Department of Justice seemed to be alarmed over it, fearing that the admission of refugees without visas would bring into the islands Nazi spies disguised as refugees. The State Department also was not so happy about it, since it would deprive the United States consuls in Europe of their rights to control emigration to United States territory. The Department of Interior, which has supervision over the Virgin Islands administration and which originally approved of Governor Cramer's order, has thus been compelled to withdraw the order.

The order may be revived when all three departments in Washington agree on the formalities under which admission of refugees to the Virgin Islands is to be regulated. It will take some time before this agreement is reached.

From behind the scenes I learn that Jewish and non-Jewish organizations interested in refugee relief work will be asked by the Department of Interior to send a survey commission to the Virgin Islands. Depending on the report which this commission brings and the extent to which these organizations obligate themselves to guarantee the maintenance of the refugees on the islands will be the decision as to whether the Virgin Islands should or should not be opened as a temporary asylum for European refugees.

Few in America know that a Jew was Governor of the Virgin Islands in 1681.

DEFENSE

Military authorities in Washington agreed this week that Yiddish newspapers and books be placed in the military libraries throughout the country for the use of Jewish boys drafted into the army. There are today more than thirty Jewish cadets at West Point. A group of journalists is leaving next week for Fort Dix for a special study as to how drafted Jewish boys have adjusted themselves there to military life. Frank L. Weil, president of the Jewish Welfare Board, visited Washington and conferred there with the military authorities on problems concerning the Jewish boys who responded to the selective service call.

CONGRESSES

The Congressional Record reprinted in full an article by Philip Slomovitz entitled "Nazi Revival on Yellow Badge." The article was published originally in the Detroit Jewish Chronicle on Sept. 13, 1940. Congressman Clarence J. McLeod suggested its inclusion in the Congressional Record as a measure of spreading goodwill among the people of the United States. . . . The Pan-American Jewish Congress which was scheduled to take place in Montevideo this month to consider problems concerning Jews in the countries of the American continent has been cancelled. Delegates from Central and South America as well as from the United States were already packing their bags and reserving seats on airplanes to Montevideo when information reached them that the Montevideo gathering had been postponed indefinitely. . . . Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, head of the American Jewish Congress, will soon start out for a trip to Latin America to make a study of Jewish life there for the World Jewish Congress.

SIGMA ALPHA MU

Special

BLOOMINGTON—The fraternity extends its sympathies and best wishes to Fra Bob Nerenberg of Kokomo who was forced to drop out of school because of illness. Bob was a leader in Sigma Zeta's sophomore class and was a mainstay on the house athletic teams.

One of the most successful dances in the chapter's history was held last Saturday night when 85 couples danced amid a setting of fire and brimstone in keeping with the theme of the dance, "Sigma Alpha Mu Goes to Hell."

Shelly Wagner, our stellar track man, is now devoting his attention to wrestling and seems to have a berth cinched on the rhinemat squad.

After the three Jewish fraternal organizations on campus—Sigma Delta Tau, Sigma Alpha Mu and Phi Beta Delta—had assumed the responsibility of sending another refugee student through the university, Fra Lou Finkle was appointed campus representative to sponsor the new student.

Sigma Alpha Mu's intramural machine shifted into second gear in preparation for the midseason drive in minor sports. Intramural standings just released show that the chapter is residing securely in fifth place among more than 25 organizations, ahead of all other Jewish organizations and just 7½ points out of first place. Even more heartening news came when the minor league volleyball team won its league championship after defeating strong squads from Beta Theta Pi, West Hall, Kappa Sigma and Kappa Delta Rho.

Guests over the week-end included the Misses Lorraine Netter, Jeanne Sacks, Naydne Bronson, June Spiegel, Phyllis Maierston, Bertha Meyers, Alberta Shalansky, Riva Hassan, Muriel Cohen, Florence Miller, Geraldine Levine, Fanny Friedland, Ruth Davis, Dorothy Kronick, Theresa Fisher, Blanche Quittel, Thelma Kammin, Phyllis Burke, Annette Abel, Betty Beitman, Shirley Fine and Betty Belle Helman, all of Bloomington; Harriet Platoff, Fra Milt Cantor, Ruth Cantor and Goldie Jean Wasserman, all of Louisville; Lucille Dvorsay of Northwestern University; Gerry Kapp, Blanche Becker, and Dori Finkle, Chicago; Charlotte Roe, University of Illinois; Eleanor Kahn, Sylvia Paskin, South Bend; Milly Lasser, Gary; Ruth Weil, Ethyl Kaplan, Sylvia Maierston, Marian Goldsmith, Zelda Klezmer, fratres Milt Blieden, Sam Patterson and Bernie Bloom, all of Indianapolis; Marian Wacksman of Cincinnati; Jane Krinzman, University of Wisconsin; Dorothy Turbow, East Chicago, and Dave Baernkopf, Jerry Becker, Bill Coonan and Joe Tannenbaum, all of Bloomington.

NEWS COLUMN—The Vichy Government, they tell us, is deliberating on a mass deportation of Jews to Madagascar. . . . Note to our lady readers: We hear that Gory Goering's favorite perfume is a conception called L'Heure Bleu. . . . He uses it in his bawth. . . . Magda Lupescu is carrying a lethal supply of poison on her person these days, and will use it if the Rumanian Iron Guardists succeeded in kidnapping her from Spain. . . . Rather death than capture is her motto. . . . Lord Haw-Haw, the renegade Englishman whom Berlin uses as its English-language propagandist, has changed his name from Joyce to Froelich—which means "joyful" in German. . . . Latest Broadway epithet for the Nazis is "Berlinsects". . . . Winchell relays the story about the babies, one German and one Italian, whose identification tags were lost. . . . "How can you tell which is which?" somebody asked the nurse in charge. . . . "That's easy," she replied. . . . Along the same line is Jimmy Dorsey's comment. "The only thing Il Duce can lick is Hitler's boots".

And that the Hindus call the Beni Israel, the brown-skinned Jews of India, by the name of Shanvar Telis, which means "Saturday Oilpressers" and refers to their observance of the Sabbath? . . . We could go on will in future columns. . . . As like this for hours, and probably you may have guessed, the source of our information is the Universal Jewish Encyclopedia.

The Editor's Chair:

After weeks of work The Post has gathered an excellent staff of correspondents throughout Indiana. This is another step forward in The Post's goal to provide a real newspaper for Indiana Jewry. As yet The Post has no correspondents in Muncie, Gary, Elkhart, Hammond and East Chicago. Anyone in these cities who feels that he is well enough acquainted with the activities in the Jewish community may apply for the position. The Post pays 10 cents per column inch for all matter printed. As for the smaller communities, The Post is attempting to arrange with individuals to supply us the news as it occurs from time to time, but not on a regular weekly basis. Anyone in these communities who wishes to send us items from time to time will be paid at the same rate.

The Post moved last week into new and larger quarters at 508-10 Meridian Life Building, just north of the Indianapolis Star, at 307 North Pennsylvania street. At last I have a decent room where I can try to concentrate without the myriad interruptions from the front office. This is your invitation to visit us when you're in town next, or when you're down town next. There is no change in the box number, which remains the same, 1633. While I'm mentioning that number, publicity chairmen should jot it down, and address their news directly to the box, since it means a matter of four or five hours in receiving mail, sometimes the difference in making our Wednesday night deadline.

All members of Hadassah and Council are invited.

72,791 Greek Jews Formidable

MINISTER of State Roberto Farinacci's declaration that Italian "weapons will not be laid down before Israel is stretched to the ground" explains to a puzzled world why Italian battalions can make no headway against the Greeks. Any one who heretofore might have suspected that Italian wrath against the Jews was, as in the case of the Nazis, a red-herring to distract attention of the citizenry from the brilliant rear marches of the Italian forces now understands that Farinacci really is serious.

Greece has 72,791 Jews, including old men, women and children, and the potential fighting troops that can be recruited from this number are formidable enough to threaten any Italian army.

Loose Reasoning

A LOT of loose reasoning has been expended in connection with the adoption by the public school system of New York of the "release" system of religious instruction. There are definite objections, but these objections have little connection with some of the wild thrusts made by some critics.

The usually reliable Chicago Jewish Chronicle, edited by H. L. Meites, cannot but believe that the introduction of the release system means "the humiliation of the Jewish boy when he is singled out to leave his classroom in order that he may attend religious school."

If there is any humiliation attached to being Jewish, certainly the "release" system is not the cause of the humiliation. This type of reasoning is reminiscent of the objection raised by one Jewish fraternity president to the Hillel Foundation when he said that "the Hillel Foundation was the cause of anti-Semitism."

The Post thinks the "release" system carries with it none of the "bogies" which others visualize. The Jewish children go to the nearest synagogue or Hebrew school building once a week for instruction if they wish, the Protestants go to their nearest church, and so forth. No one is singled out. The Post doubts that the release system will give the children involved the first inkling that there are differences of religious backgrounds.

A Good Set of Rules

CLEAR expositions of confusing situations are rare, and a word account of the attitude to be adopted in the present day is valuable beyond computation. Such a statement is that by Dr. Everett Ross Clinchy of the National Conference of Christians and Jews. It should be read (and heeded) by everyone. It is reprinted herewith from Rabbi Stephen S. Wise's Free Synagogue weekly bulletin under the title, "Four Musts for Democracy":

"America can avoid the inter-religious strife of other countries so long as Catholics, Jews and Protestants go loyally each to their own altars and bring back from their hours of worship all God has given to them, pouring it out into common spiritual treasury of America. Herein lies the ensurance of democracy—the freedom of the human spirit and the unselfish, sacrificial devotion of every division to the well-being of all.

"Four steps are necessary if democracy is to continue in the United States:

"1. No hate movement must be allowed to arise. Hate disintegrates a nation as it does an individual. Yesterday, it was anti-Catholicism; before that it was anti-Quaker and anti-Evangelical and Reform. In our times subversive forces scatter anti-Jew hate. Let me remind you that anti-Semitism always leads on to anti-Christian hate. Every movement to crack down on any cultural or religious group ruins democracy.

"2. America must produce a more just economic order than communists, fascists or nationalists can promise. Today American labor, farm workers, employers, investors and office help get more food, shelter, clothing, leisure time and money than the people of any dictatorship. The socialist dictatorship of Stalin, Mussolini and Hitler start out promising utopian socialism. Then they cow their frightened followers with fear, secret police, violence and concentration camp, enforcing tyranny. Finally they destroy both Christianity and Judaism in an attempt to create religious loyalty to their class, national or race fanaticism. But we Americans need to worry about the ten million unemployed, the sharecroppers and the lowest income bracket. Political democracy is related to economic democracy. The range between the very rich and the very poor must not be permitted to be stretched so far that the fabric of political economy will snap.

"3. Our citizenry must get steamed up about American democracy. Communists are zealous, Nazis are fanatical, Fascists are evangelical—all are missionary-minded. The citizens of the United States must prize highly, and not take for granted, the hard-won liberties of free speech, a free press, freedom of assembly, freedom to worship and freedom of petition.

"4. We need a religious re-awakening to come simultaneously in every church, cathedral and synagogue in the United States. Democracy is related to religion, because respect for persons and freedom of the human spirit are religious values. The Pope is helpful when he suggests a movement "for God and country" in every nation. A religious re-dedication of every citizen will produce the spirit of self-sacrificing family life in the streets and business of the nation."

Current Comment

Failure of General Jewish Council Discussed by Louis Lipsky—The failure of the General Jewish Council must be taken as the failure of American Jewish leadership. It is a reflection not of the mood and capacity of local leadership, but of the inept, egotistic national leadership, that lack courage and vision. The men of the "provinces"—of all classes and elements—are prepared for united action, for single communal responsibility. They are prepared for service. They are not obsessed by the traditions of organizations or parties. They are eager to play their part in discharging the obligations of the Jews of America in the solution of Jewish problems. But national leadership is lacking. Organizational loyalty stands in the way of union. The national leaders rely upon their prestige, the loyalty of Jews to the traditions of the organizations they represent, to hold the local communities in a state of submission. They hope to prevent the revolt of the communities.

But Jewish needs are becoming more and more pressing. They are bound to break through all traditions and all loyalties. These needs will break the "sovereignty" of the organized national groups that stand in the way of Jewish solidarity. They will set aside a leadership unwilling to adjust itself to the demands of these revolutionary days, that persist in narrowing the outlook, avoiding responsibility and controlled by dogmatic prejudices. The Jewish communities of America are preparing for revolt. That revolt the leaders of the past will not be able to suppress.
